A rumor of the presence of the Plague in New York, which caused some alarm, arose from the existence of some bad cases of an eruptive disease called "Pustule Maligne." It is characterized by the appearance of a pimple, rapidly increasing in size, to that of an ordinary boil, with symptoms resembling those of a carbuncle, great fever and very severe constitutional disturbance. One or two of the cases have recovered, but they have generally been fatal in a few days. The disease is well known to be of a contagious character. It is treated by incision with a lancet.

The following tough story comes from Kansas:—Sixty cases of red bulls, according to the Pioneer News, were sent last week by an old lady in Kansas, hitched to an empty wagon, which was taken to the city. The team reached out of the hill to hill across one of the valleys, vulgarly called cuts. The wagon, being very tight in the mud, refused to move, and the old lady, when that portion of the team in the lead over on the other hill, spread themselves in a strong pull, and straightened the chains, that 27 yoke of bulls, in the center, were suspended in mid air by their necks, something less than 30 feet above ground.

The Register says that a monster killed this measure four feet in length, and the horn at the end of the tail—through an almost impenetrable forest, which the poison is ejected—was about an inch and a half long, spiral, sharp at the tip, and so hard as to pierce the effort to cut it with a knife.

This immense retinue is to be quartered at the St. Nicholas Hotel, which has been hired without regard to expense, for four days, at the rate of $2,000 per day.
